FOUR ARE HURT

After spending the week-end in the Carlisle hospital, the result of injuries suffered in an automobile accident, Saturday evening, Arch A. Freed, 30, of Biglerville, was discharged as a patient today.

Freed, who suffered severe lacerations, faces a charge of operating an automobile while under the influence of liquor as a result of the accident in which he and five other persons were hurt. He was arrested at the scene of the accident by Boss Trimmer, Carlisle's chief of police. Freed posted $500 bail for a hearing, the date for which has not been set.

Second Driver Held

George Gamble, Carlisle, alleged driver of the other car in the smashup, also was charged with operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of liquor, and was committed to the Carlisle police station.

Four occupants of Gamble's machine were so severely hurt they were removed to the Carlisle hospital for treatment. They are Reuben Gamble, an infant, suffering from shock; Anna Gamble, who has a fractured hip; Dorothea and Mrs. Alvera Carothers, suffering from lacerations and shock. Others in the Gamble car were Leroy M. and Leroy M. Carothers, Jr., who suffered lacerations, but were not admitted to the hospital.

Clyde Agan, Carlisle, one of the occupants of Freed's car, also is in the Carlisle hospital, suffering from lacerations. Chief Trimmer informed The Gettysburg Times by telephone this afternoon that he was looking for several other persons said to have been with Freed at the time of the accident, but who left the scene afterward.

Report Second Crash

According to Officer Trimmer, Gamble's car hit a machine with a New Jersey license previous to the collision with Freed's car.

The accident occurred on the Walnut Bottom road, near the Sadler estate, in Carlisle. The machines were badly damaged in the crash which was head-on.

APPLES FALL OFF

This will be a year of short fruit crops both in Pennsylvania and the United States as a whole, according to a report of the Federal-State crop reporting service. In Pennsylvania there will be about two-fifths of full apple and peach crops, one-third of a grape crop.

The prospective total of 1929 apple production of the United States is 17 per cent smaller than the 1928 crop, but about 25 per cent larger than the 1927 crop. In Pennsylvania the apple crop is forecast at 6,635,000 bushels, as compared with the crop of 8,460,000 bushels harvested in 1928.

Returns from 125 orchardists in all sections of the state indicate prospective apple production, as a percentage of a full crop, by varieties, will be: All early varieties, 42 per cent; Red Astrachan, 26 per cent; Early Harvest, 27 per cent; Yellow Transparent, 39 per cent; Wealthy, 46 per cent; all late varieties, 37 per cent; Jonathan, 36 per cent; Grimes, 43 per cent; Rome Beauty, 31 per cent; Ben Davis, 39 per cent; Gano, 36 per cent; McIntosh, 38 per cent; Rhode Island Greening, 30 per cent; Stayman, 28 per cent; York Imperial, 14 per cent; Baldwin, 43 per cent, and Northern Spy, 33 per cent.

Cumberland-Shenandoah commercial growers, however, expect 82 per cent of a full crop. By varieties, commercial production for the state, as a percentage of a full crop, is forecast to be: Carman, 62 per cent; Champion, 15 per cent; Hiley, 60 per cent; Belle of Georgia, 67 per cent; Elberta, 65 per cent, and J. GOD'S LOVE IS STABLE, SAYS LOCAL PASTOR

Rev. C. F. Catherman Tells Story of Elijah's Devotion to Almighty.

CHURCHES OPEN

"Just as Elijah appeared before Ahab and Jezebel unannounced and unheeded to tell them God's will so does God appear to the Christians of today," said the Rev. C. F. Catherman, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church, East Middle street, in the Sunday morning sermon.

"This abruptness used by Elijah in appearing before the king of Israel to warn him of the fate of the country is nothing new, said the pastor, 'because even now life is very much like that. Every day, maybe in the actions of a friend, maybe in dreams of the future or maybe in nature, does God show his word to our souls and minds. However, it is all so unlooked for and sudden that many of the examples of His love for us go unseen. Ahab and Jezebel did not understand Elijah's warning and they too, suffered later.'

"Scientists have recently failed to explain all human experience by their laws and formulas," continued Mr. Catherman, "However, there are a few mysteries such as life, death, love and pain, that must never be understood fully by humanity. All these things speak of God and to attempt to explain them, we are trying to drown out the call of God in our ears. In much the same way Jezebel tried to make light of the warning of the prophet, by saying that Elijah was only a man from the hills with no learning and consequently no truth in his speech.

Places of Refuge

"After this severe trial in the palace, Elijah looked for a place to rest. He found it in nature, that God had provided for him. So, with people today, whether it be the church or other places of worship, they are always open when temptations are too great and spiritual strength is needed. God, too, has many ministers who are always willing to teach the love and faith of a great God.

"Our faith after finding Christ need never falter for we should be able to bear up under the faith and love in our Christ. Let us not be afraid that in the moment of trial, Jesus Christ will fail us."

The Rev. C. F. Catherman took his text from the 17th chapter of I Kings.

Four cars figured in a collision Sunday afternoon, near Shrewsbury. One of the machines was being driven by O. D. Whited, of Guilford.

A third car, driven by E. G. Fishel, of York, stopped in the rear of Whited's machine. Clayton Linebaugh, also of York, attempted to stop in back of Fishel's machine. Trans-Atlantic Aviators Balked In Attempt to Span Ocean Saturday.

2 FLIERS RETURN

New York, July 15 (AP).—The Polish committee in New York today received a message from Major Kubala, at Santa Cruz in the Azores, stating that his companion, Major Ludwig Idzikowski, was still alive but so severely burned that no hope was held for him.

The message signed by Major Kubala and sent from the Island of Graciosa was timed at 7:45 o'clock this morning.

In his message Major Kubala informed the committee that both he and his companion had been rescued from their airplane, the Marshal Pilsudski, in flames. Major Idzikowski had both feet burned and was in so critical a condition that it was not expected he could recover.

Previous advices received at Horta have said that Major Idzikowski was dead and had already been buried. Communication with the Island of Graciosa is extremely difficult and no confirmation of Major Idzikowski's death was available.

Horta, Azores, July 14.—The attempted trans-Atlantic flight of the Polish airplane Marshal Pilsudski ended abruptly in a crash on the Island of Graciosa. Major Ludwig Idzikowski, the pilot, who had spent two years in preparation for the flight, was killed. Major Casimir Kubala, his companion, escaped death by falling or jumping from the plane, but was so seriously injured that he was rushed to a hospital.

An eye witness to the tragic ending of the flight said that the airplane suddenly rolled as the pilot attempted to gain the largest field on the island where he hoped to find a haven after a long struggle with adverse winds under the handicap of a faulty motor.

This observer said Major Kubala hurtled from the plane as it neared the ground. The plane crashed and almost instantly there was a strong explosion in which Major Idzikowski met his death. The major's funeral was held Sunday evening on the island that marked the end of his hopes and plans.

Encounter Adverse Winds

Taking off from Le Bourget airport near Paris at daybreak on Saturday, the Polish plane had begun what appeared as a race with friendly French rivals. Both expeditions encountered adverse winds that approached hurricane force and the French commander, Capt. Dieudonne Coste, although the Azores lay much nearer him, turned back to France. He landed safely.

The two-Polish fliers fought on. Their radio told of engine trouble and of constant struggle with the gales that threatened at any moment to wreck their ship.

The Marshal Pilsudski was a land plane and their chief hope lay in reaching the football grounds at Horta which had been made into an improvised landing field.

The radio gave few details of their struggle and Major Kubala Sunday night was shielded from questioners. It appeared that their plight was desperate when they reached Graciosa, one of the islands of the central group and about thirty-five miles northeast of here.

Eyewitness Tells of Crash

One of the natives of the island Sunday said, toward 10 p. m. a gray plane appeared and began circling around the island in search of a landing place. We attempted by means of gesticulations to indicate the largest field, which is fairly level.

"The alternative was suggested that the aviators might risk alighting on the sea. We prepared to rush to the rescue in that event. The airplane headed toward the field we had indicated but suddenly it barrel-rolled, hurling out the mechanic.

"The airplane had barely touched the ground when there was a great explosion, instantly killing the pilot. Major Kubala is at (Continued on Second Page) present in the hospital at Graciosa."

Paris, July 15.—Capt. Dieudonne Coste brought his transatlantic plane, the Question Mark, down at Villa Coublay, four miles southeast of Versailles, at 9:27 a. m. Sunday (4:27 a. m. Eastern daylight time) Sunday morning, a wiser but sadder aviator after a bitter a losing struggle against the fury of an Atlantic gale which turned him back from America's shores after he had covered nearly half the distance to his goal.

Coste's Spirit Unbroken
As the conqueror of the South Atlantic stepped from the plane in which he and his mechanic, Jacques Bellonte, had set out twenty-eight hours before to fly from Le Bourget airdrome to New York, onto the sun-baked military aviation field, it was clear that his spirit had been shaken, but not broken, by his struggle to fight his way through what he himself vividly described as a "stone wall of wind."

"This is not a very glorious homecoming for the Fourteenth of July" (France's national holiday), he remarked with a rueful smile. "But here we are," he added in grim paraphrase of Colonel Lindbergh's first words when he landed at Paris, "but not at New York."

When news of the tragic ending of the Marshal Pilsudski's flight reached here, Coste was greatly affected by it. Even after hearing it he repeated, however, "I shall still try to cross again; but I shall bide my time."

Omaha Convent Founder May Be First U. S. Saint

A trial this summer sponsored by Bishop Joseph F. Rummel, of Omaha (right) will open proceedings to determine if sainthood shall be conferred on Mother Magdalene (left), founder of Omaha's Poor Clare convent (below).

Omaha, Neb. (AP)—Mother Mary Magdalene, an Italian noblewoman who established this country's first Poor Clare convent in Omaha, 50 years ago, may become America's first saint.

During her life she "practiced virtues to an heroic degree," theologians believe, and therefore is entitled to sainthood. Canonization proceedings are under way.

Mother Magdalene was Countess Annette Bentivoglio, daughter of the governor of Rome, before she assumed the brown habit of her order. She died in Evansville, Indiana, in 1905.

The canonization, if finally achieved, may take 5 or 50 years. Only once before has such a proceeding been instituted in the United States and it still is pending.

A solemn trial this summer will determine Mother Magdalene's claim. By appointment of Bishop Joseph F. Rummel, of Omaha, the Very Rev. Albert Kleber, of St. Meinrad's, Indiana, will be vice-postulator, and present the case for Mother Magdalene.

The Rev. Peter Gannon, of Omaha, will be the prosecutor, or "devil's advocate." He will contest every claim and attempt to prove it false. The Rev. Jeremiah Buckley, of Omaha, will sit as judge. If the cardinals and the pope agree with the Omaha inquiry that her life was stainless, she may be called "Venerable" and further investigation begun.

Beatification is the next step. For this an inquiry must be made into Mother Magdalene's reputation as a much more rigid inquiry than that required for veneration. Once more the evidence will go to Rome for scrutiny.

For formal canonization evidence of at least two miracles must be produced.

If canonization is achieved in the end, it will be formally bestowed at a magnificent ceremony in the Vatican. Cost of such inquiry and the ceremonies generally exceeds $50,000.

A short time later Martin found it impossible to work and was taken to the office of a physician who advised him to go home. He received a cut hand and a bruised hip where the car is said to have struck him.

Following the crash Mr. Tarbuton stopped his machine and rendered assistance. He suggested taking the injured man to the hospital, but Martin said he would continue to work.

HEARING DEFECT RESULTS FROM FIRECRACKER BLAST

Chambersburg—C. A. Weist, long-time hotel clerk and ardent baseball fan, is slowly recovering from defective hearing caused by explosion of a firecracker at Henninger Field on July 4. Mr. Weist was sitting in the bleachers when someone apparently tried to throw a firecracker from a higher seat onto the grass, but missed aim. The firecracker struck Mr. Weist in the back and fell at his heels exploding. The detonation made Mr. Weist deaf in both ears, and after daily treatments he is able to hear slightly with one ear.

For the LOVE of a LADY

By Jeffery Farnol

SYNOPSIS: Sir Richard is hiding in a lair of highwaymen, having fastened suspicion of murder upon himself in order to shield, he believes, Helen D'Arcy. Captain Despard and Helen, riding through the woods, discover Julian's body and Richard's ring beside it. Despard yields to Helen's pleading and gives her the ring. While hostile neighbors condemn Richard as the murderer, Helen and her aunt, the Duchess, stoutly defend him and Helen admits to her aunt—that she loves the man. The Marquis of Merivale gives himself with a sword and goes forth, he says, to still a few tongues that so glibly accuse his friend.

Chapter 18

A BLOW AT SIR RICHARD

THE morning was sunny and glad, birds chirped merrily, even the Marquis seemed affected, for his habitual languor was gone, his blue eyes were keen and bright.

"Gregory, old friend," said he suddenly, "friendship is a very holy obligation—eh?"

"It is, my lord. But where are we going?"

"On a pilgrimage of friendship, Greg, to track base rumour to its loathly lair and muzzle, pink or choke it into silence." The Marquis smiled happily and laid one slim finger on his sword. "This day."

Sir Richard's cloak—blood-stained—found near Julian's body.

"What, to the Moat House, sir?" "Indeed, Greg. 'Tis there we are most like to find that fellow Despard. He haunts the 'Handsome D'Arcy' or her money. A hawk, Greg, beauty and fortune the lure. So come other birds of prey, fine gentlemen all, from town or country, hovering over the spoil—and I with 'em."

They had reached that deep and tall hedge by the Moat House and now, forth of this leafy hedge shot a small, slim brown hand that clutched the Marquis' embroidered coat-skirts.

The Marquis whirled to see a small, elfin, child-like peering up. "If y' please, I'm Shurt o' the poor folk as wants to see the pretty lady, please."

"Slunk me!" cried the Marquis.

"I brings her a message from Truffen Camlo, but I darsent go in, 'cause he's in there. Sir John Parret."

"What, d'ye know him?"

"All the poor folk knows him, sir, and—hates him. He had me whipped once, he did!"

The Marquis nodded: "I'll take y' in."

The lawns at the Moat House were shaded by great trees and shut in by tall hedges of clipped yew. Beyond one of these hedges Sir John Parret chanced to be speaking, very plain and distinct:

"...and as every one knows, Guyford, alas, hath long been a hum-discardit, nay, a positive menace to us o' the county! To-day, gentlemen, today he stands—very gravely suspect as a hum—a malefactor befoiled by a kinsman's blood—"

The Marquis led Shurt to a rustic seat in secluded corner, bade her wait there; then, nodding to Gregory, he stepped out upon the sunn lawn and beheld Sir John Parret holding forth:

"It is but right, sirs, that we gentlemen o' the county should see that he, forthwith, be driven forth of our hum—our midst—"

The sharp rap of a cane upon a well-nourished person stopped him with a gasp of angry amazement and starting about at this indignity he saw the Marquis smiling at him.

"You...you touched me, my lord!" Sir John gasped.

"I rapped you, Sir John. I tapt you t' draw 'tention t' the foll'ing notable facts; to wit, sirs—that absent gentleman y' dare t' ampeach, vilify and asperse is my old and honoured friend, and secondly, sirs, you are a liar an' a bag o' wind!"

I here and now beg leave to tell ye that any man who says, hath said, or should say aught to the further disparagement of Sir Richard Guyford is a mere lying rogue. And now, should any gentleman feel himself affronted, I shall be purely happy to afford him, or them, any and every satisfaction."

No man spoke; then Captain Despard stepped forward and saluted the Marquis with a smiling bow. "My lord," said he lightly, "though I have not the honour of Sir Richard Guyford's friendship, yet I am with you in defence of his innocence. That he should be any way implicated in poor Julian's taking-off is preposterous and altogether unthinkable."

My lady Helen, who chose this moment to appear, returned the captain's salutation with courtesy far more gracious than usual. And in this moment came a demure young footman who, proclaimed, in voice unnecessarily loud:

"If you please, Sir John Parret's 'ead-keeper, ma'm to see Sir John—very important!"

Even as the young footman spoke a burly fellow stepped out from the yew hedge but, beholding the fine company, paused and stood abashed.

"By your leave, ladies," said Sir John. "What is it, Grimes?"

"Why, Sir John, me and Jargo ha' been a-searchin' of the wood as you so ordered, sir, and we found this here, y'r honour!" So saying, from beneath his arm the keeper

SYNOPSIS: Helen D'Arcy is in love—she confesses to her aunt—with Sir Richard Guyford, suspect for the killing of his cousin, Julian. She does not know, of course, that Sir Richard placed his ring beside Julian's body to draw suspicion upon himself, because remembering Helen's faithful threat, he believed she is a murderer. Captain Despard and Helen find the ring and she takes it to hide the evidence. Then a powerful weapon falls into the hands of Richard's enemies—his military cloak, stained with Julian's blood, is found near the fatal spot.

Chapter 19

A MESSAGE FROM RICHARD

NOW as Helen, the Marquis, and Captain Despard stood thus, looking upon each other in a dismay far beyond words, the Duchess approached.

"B' the powers!" she exclaimed, "three images o' tragedy—and all b' reason o' one dirty old cloak!"

"But he wore that same cloak in the lair!" Helen said.

"Poh, poh! to say 'twas him—well, he's in the wood! So mighty convenient to be found!"

To the arboreal they went and there seated, waited for the Duchess to begin.

"Now!" said the Duchess, "now, is there wan of us belaves Richard could stoop to murder?"

Helen and Gregory stared at Richard's note, amazed, puzzled, surprised.

Helen: Nay, but, dear aunt, how if 'twas a duel and—

Duchess: We may know 'twas not a duel or Richard would never ha' run away. Beyond all doubt 'twas murder shure. And what truly amazing murderer! He scatters his possessions ari about the fatal spot! So reckless! His cloak, his ring—tomorrow they may find his hat and his boots. Oh, 'tis an astonishing murderer! So very infinite careful!

Marquis: (brightening) You think 'twas placed there by other hands than Dick's—ha?

Helen: But, dearly beloved, I gave Richard back the ring! I saw the cloak upon him! How then can they—

Duchess: Oh, Miss? And who's to say he was not way-laid—hurt, wounded, stripped and robbed—

Helen: Richard hurt! Wounded, perchance dead!

Duchess: (repping snuffbox) Such a clack o' chatterboxes! Am I never to speak?—who's this?

Three pairs of eyes glanced round to see a small, slim figure curtsying demurely.

"I be Shurt, if you please," said she softly. "I be Shurt Camlo, o' the Poor Folk, w' a message."

"Why, Shurt?" cried Helen, smiling, and with hands outstretched: little Shurt, running forward, cuddled down at my lady's knee.

"My mother bid me find ye," said Shurt, smiling up into the lovely face bent above her; so saying, she held up a small, folded paper; Helen beheld scrawled thereon:

"Greg."

So to Gregory she gave it and he, with murmur of apology, read it hastily, and though the letter seemed of no great length, it brought him to his feet with cheeks flushed and eyes aglow.

The Duchess exclaimed: "Read it, man, read it, this minute!"

So Gregory read as follows: "My Dear Greg: "When you read this I shall be a murderer proclaimed. And a murderer I must remain for divers reasons. Meanwhile, since even murderers must live, bring me what money you have in hand to the old forest, resting place at 10 o'clock on Wednesday."

"This far I am able in mind and body, and so, to these despite the damning evidence of my guilt, I subscribe myself now as ever thy grateful, loving, Guyford of Weare."

Here Gregory paused to glance into each intent face.

"Post Scriptum—Pray bring also my stoutest cloak, I mean the old campaigning cloak that is lined and turned up with scarlet."

Helen drew a deep breath. "His old cloak faced with scarlet? But I saw him wearing it! Oh, Gregory, what... what can it mean?"

"Ah, my lady," he answered, lifting radiant eyes to the cloudless heaven, "it can but mean that who you saw in the cloak, it was most assuredly not Sir Richard."

.....

"Nick's late!" said Sir Richard, frowning.

"Friend," quoth the Galloping Parson, "the High Toby concern is profession as no man may play fast and loose with."

"Faith, Rob, thou'rt at least a conscientious robber!"

"Friend, I am so—for highway robbery should be taken seriously, as I've warned Nick many's the time, but then—Nick's... in love!" Here the speaker shook grim head in scornful disparagement. "And love hath been the ruin o' many a promising High Tobyman as should have neither friend nor sweetheart. A true Tobyman should work alone, ride solitary and have faith abiding in Providence."

"Nay, Rob, surely Providence and robbery be but ill-assorted?"

"Ah, verily, friend! But I, though sinner by trade, am religious by instinct and reverent by nature. Bred to the church was I, and should ha' made a notable good parson, but a cruel destiny decreed

Delaware Entry

Harvey Maguligan, 16, of Wilmington, is Delaware's entrant in the Edison scholarship contest.

The second was W. C. Marsh, now said to be living out his last days in secluded retirement.

Drew, founder of the night boat line, and Marsh primarily were stock speculators and manipulators and both had turbulent business careers. Carrington is of a different type.

Until 1915 a lawyer and politician in Baltimore, Carrington came to New York to reorganize a banking property. He has remained here since, injecting new blood into anemic enterprises.

About 18 months ago he took over the Hudson River Night Line, then in receivership. A doctor of financially sick properties, rather than a market gambler, he set about reviving its prestige by effecting economies, restoring the morale of its personnel and developing new facilities.

For Carrington dreams of a time when river traffic will regain its pre-railway importance. He sees the Hudson as an outlet for the freight tonnage of the Great Lakes and a gateway to the seven seas.

Even now approximately 2,000,000 passengers ride the boats each year between New York and Albany and every day more than 1,000 tons of freight are carried over this route provided by nature.

Sidelights of New York

By Richard Massoc.

New York—Miss Moe Murray, the buoyant blond of cinematic romance, was having lunch with a group of writing folk recently and conversation had reached the point where somebody asks, "What good books have y' read lately?" Turning her starry orbs upon an editor who put the question, the actress said she had been enjoying a biography of Poe.

"And isn't it interesting," she added, "how people traveled in those days. You know—by boat."

Hudson Traffic

For more than 100 years the Hudson river has been a waterway for boats laden with freight and passengers.

As the grey and purple haze of evening settles down upon the wavy horizon of hills, steamers set out for the river's upper reaches with cargoes of goods and excursionists.

In former days, when travel was more leisurely, river traffic was extensive and gay. The decks of Hudson steamers then were loaded with sporting crowds on their way to Saratoga, many of them racing enthusiasts who took their horses along, below decks.

Now the passengers are mostly vacationists from the city, off to escape its hot asphalt among the wooded resorts and boarding farms in the Catskills and Berkshires. Others are motor tourists, embarking with their cars for trips over upstate highways.

River Trade Promoter

Every evening a snort, heavy-set man of some 60 years leaves his office in the financial district and goes to the pier to watch the loading of these motorists and their automobiles. He is Col. Edward C. Carrington, president of the Hudson River Navigation company.

Colonel Carrington is the third of a picturesque trio of boat operators on the Hudson. The first was Daniel Drew, contemporary of Jubilee Jim Fisk and Jay Gould.

TEN YEARS AGO

Community Idea in New Hotel.
A community hotel, owned by the citizens of Gettysburg and run under his own personal management, is the proposition which R. H.
Heyn, of Norwalk, Connecticut, will present to persons of this community through the Chamber of Commerce.
Mr. Heyn, who several years ago bought the property on the northwest corner of the junction of Chambersburg and Washington streets, has been in the hotel business for nineteen years. For many years Mr. Heyn managed hotels in Cairo, Egypt; Paris, London, Monte Carlo, Palermo, Italy, Pittsburgh and Uniontown, for the Ritz Carton firm.

Butt—Scherdel: Ralph Butt, son of Amos Butt, of Chambersburg street, and Miss Ruth Scherdel, of Hanover, were married by Rev.
Ralph Bergstresser of the St. Matthew's Lutheran church at Hanover on Wednesday night at 8 o'clock.
The ring ceremony was used.

Marvin Hoover, of Hanover, acted as best man and Gertrude Clap-saddle, also of Hanover, was maid of honor.

After a short honeymoon they will reside in Gettysburg.

Mrs. Butt is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Scherdel and a sister of William Scherdel, formerly pitcher of the Hoover Blue Ridge league club and now with the St.
Louis Cardinals.

Hoffman Hotel for Gettysburg: Gettysburg is to become a link in the chain of Hoffman Hotels, which it is planned will extend along the eastern part on the Lincoln Highway.

Lee F. Hoffman, owner of the Hoffman Hotels in Bedford and Ligonier, accompanied by George
H. Hocking, came to the Lincoln Way Hotel, Tuesday afternoon and stated that he intended locating one of his hostleries here.

Will Not Build Pool This Year: Because of insufficient funds the swimming pool, which was to have been built at Kurtz Playground this year will be postponed.

It has been estimated that $3,000 will be necessary to construct the pool.

Sells Hotel and Theater: Richard H. Humphries, owner of the Lincoln Way Theatre and the Wabash Hotel for the past two and one half years, has sold both properties to Harry S. Amwake, of Philadelphia, and intends leaving Gettysburg on account of poor health.

Harry S. Amwake has recently been in the mining business in Colorado and California and has also dealt in real estate.

City Waifs Will Come Wednesday: More than one hundred waifs from the slums of New York city will arrive in Gettysburg Wednesday evening to spend two weeks as the guests of members of the St. James Lutheran church congregation. The children will be in charge of A. V. M. Mortensen, Superintendent of the Lutheran Inner Mission, and three lady attendants.

Rev. J. B. Baker will meet the party in Harrisburg and make the plans necessary for their distribution.
While many of the ladies will entertain but one child, Mrs. Orville Riley has asked that she be allowed to care for fifteen of the waifs on the Riley farm in Stra-ban township.

To Sparrows Point: William Ken-delhart of West Middle street has gone to Sparrows Point, Maryland, to work in one of the large steel plants there and to pitch in the industrial ball league, composed of teams from the various shops.

Stewart, United States Navy, is spending some time with his parents, Dr. and Mrs. Henry Stewart, Baltimore street.

Mrs. George Grouse, daughter of Benton Albert, announces the birth of a daughter. Her husband is at the army camp at Du Pont, Del-

Just Folks

By Edgar A. Guest

A GOLFER'S RUINATION
One day I drove a golf ball straight
Two hundred yards or more;
A golfing feat, I now repeat,
I'd never done before.
Its memory still with me survives,
And now I curse my common drives.

Just once by chance a mashie shot
Of mine was straight and true.
By chance or luck, near by it stuck,
I made the hole in two.
But oh, I've grumbled much since then Because that shot won't come again.

And once I shot a seventy-nine
Before my hair turned gray,
But ninety-one's the best I've done
Since that unhappy day.
And now I wail to all I see,
"My game's not what it used to be."

Washington Hocks says the only fault he can find with a checker too much thinking for the amount

A nice joke was played on Sid-fan her, and while he was not looking she went away with another fellow and Sidney kept on fanning for a good while before he missed her.

Little Jack Rabbit

By David Cory

"When everything is going wrong
Just hum a merry little song.
Yes, hum it over twice again, You'll find a rainbow through the rain.
And soon the sky will turn a blue,
The rooster sing a cockle-do,
And Bobbie Redvest from a tree
A song of joyful melody."

sang Lady Love, the little rabbit's pretty bunny mother, as she kneaded the dough for the bunny-suckle bread.

"How do you learn all your songs?" asked her little bunny boy.

"I just make them up as I go along," answered Lady Love, with a smile.

"Happiness is in the heart,
Singing all the day.
Nothing's dull when one is glad—
Work seems just like play."

"Ha, ha!" laughed the little rabbit, "I think you could write wonderful fairy stories, mother."

"Maybe," said Lady Love, with a wistful look in her brown eyes,
"but I have only time to dream them. Perhaps some day we'll find time, you and I, to fill a book with songs of our little bungalow."

Just then a knock came at the kitchen door. There stood the Yellow Dog Tramp, his old straw hat over one ear and a little tin can in his hand—beg pardon, his paw.

"Won't you fill my old tin cup with coffee till it's brimming up?" begged the good old bow wow in poetry. You see, he had lived so long in the wildwood where birds sing and leaves rustle that he had turned into a dog poet without knowing it. Yes, indeed; he wrote beautiful doggerel verse.

"Come right in and you shall see
A lady bunny make turnip tea.
We have no coffee, but you won't care
If you have a delicious chocolate clair."

answered the little rabbit lady in poetry. She, also, had heard the birds sing the Bubbling Brook craon a tune.

"Tea or coffee,—it doesn't matter; I'm not particular," answered the old dog, and carefully wipping his feet on the doormat, he trotted into the spotless little kitchen.

"My, but you look pretty in

TODAY'S TALK

By GEORGE MATTHEWS ADAMS

QUEER AND LOVABLE

WILLIAM McFEE, in his splendidly appreciative introduction to one of the last editions of W. H. Hudson's "Purple Land," speaks of this genius as a man who was "primarily a naturalist with bohemian habits, a queer, lovable fellow."

One day Hudson took it into his head to call on Joseph Conrad at his Kentish home. Tall, a trifle stooped, with a head smaller than his big frame would suggest, he stalked past the window. At first it was thought that a bailiff had arrived, or perhaps a man to discuss the sale of a horse. But it was Hudson —came to talk to Conrad about his first great book, "Almayer's Folly."

In all of Hudson's writings, you see the personality of the man beaming through, like light.

It has become a habit to call a person whom you can't understand, queer—but if that same person has concealed within his personality the lovable quality, then that same queerness really amounts to genius.

I have always been inclined to look upon this quality of queerness as something uniquely original and individual. A man being true his his pattern.

In this connection, it is well to state how much Conrad owed to the meeting of a young American writer, a man whose belated fame stands out today in such brilliant hues—Stephen Crane.

Crane was considered a "queer, lovable fellow," as well. And it was to the early encouragement of such men as Hamlin Garland and William Dean Howells that Crane was given the opportunity of demonstrating his genius to a world all too unwilling to accept it.

I am afraid that the world looks upon many of its fine, rich characters as too queer for their understanding—missing out on their lovable qualities, and thereby losing the spiritual essence of their sterling worth.

NEW TURKEY MOVES TO BANISH OLD
GOD OF WAR FROM NATIONAL MIND

By Priscilla Ring

Angora, Turkey (AP).—Another of the old gods is tumbling in the new Turkey, and this time it is the god of war. A statement in parliament by the Turkish Minister of Finance that nearly $1,500,000 will be cut from military and naval appropriations for the coming year is one indication among many that the Kemalists are backsliding from the ancient Ottoman worship of battle.

Gone is the day when a Turkish sultan could launch a war to capture the island of Cyprus because he thirsted for its wine, and gone, from a Turkey battered by centuries of almost incessant fighting, is the thirst for a far-flung empire. There still exists enough of the old Moslem faith that he who dies fighting for his country will go straight to paradise to make the Turks rank among the finest soldiers in the world, but the present regime is not stimulating and capitalizing that faith as did the war-loving sultan-caliphs.

The present regime, anxious to consolidate its internal reforms and the independence of that portion of Turkey which is rescued from the wreck of the Ottoman Empire, is out on a quest for peace, and a quest for friends.

With the lean, suave foreign minister, Tefik Ruchdi Bey, just home from his second European good-will tour, the new Turkey is joyfully trumpeting down the old adage that "Nobody loves a Turk." Tefik Ruchdi Bey has to his credit the signing of more treaties of amity and non-aggression than any other living statesman, negotiations during the current year having brought the total number of such treaties up to twenty-five.

"Turn to the East, and turn to the West," has been the refrain running through the young republic's foreign policy. Her treaty-made friends include oriental nations such as Afghanistan and Persia on the one hand, and on the other western powers such as Italy, Germany and far-off Brazil. Turkey's desire to maintain amicable relations also with countries which did not sign the Treaty of Lausanne, is indicated by her recent extension for a year of the commercial modus vivendi with the United States, which grants mutual most-favored nation treatment.

In general high success has crowned the new Turkey's efforts to break down the bars of distrust through which the western world peered suspiciously at the Turkey of the past. At present the republic's diplomatic horizon is certainly more nearly cloudless than diplomatic weather bureaus are usually able to report.

Only one big problem awaits solution in the realm of foreign relations, and the amicable trend of negotiations promises early satisfactory settlement. This concerns France, the points at stake being the determination of the Turco-Syrian frontier, and the purchase by Turkey from France of the Mersine railroad.

Ralph De Palma is in his twenty-second consecutive year as a professional automobile race driver.

Washington Highlights

By Herbert Plummer

Washington.—There's a studio on the upper floor of the Chilean embassy in Washington.

It overlooks a wall of green trees banked against an elevation at the back of the house.

An African musical instrument made from the entire shell of a tortoise rests on a table. Quaint shaped pieces of Chilean pottery, decorated with intricate designs, are scattered about. Pottery from Europe and textiles from India are to be seen. Beautiful paintings hang from the walls.

It is the retreat of Mme. Herminia A. De Davila, wife of the Chilean ambassador to the United States. And when time permits she goes there and paints.

A woman with a most vital and original personality is Madame Davila. There is a portrait of her hanging from one of the walls in the embassy. It was painted by the Rumanian artist, Negulesco. The resemblance is striking. The decided characteristics that one notes in the woman were not overlooked by the artist.

Just Six Years

Madame Davila has been painting only six years. Yet in that short time her work has been exhibited on two continents. In her native city of Santiago she has had "one-man shows." The last exhibition of the season at the Yorke Gallery in Washington included some of her work. And in both places her canvases aroused much favorable comment.

She is particularly interested in still life subjects. The peculiar looking musical instrument, made from a tortoise shell which she brought from Africa, is the subject of one of her paintings. She delights to put the houses of her native land, and their interiors, on canvas.

Madame Davila does most of her work during the winter and spring months. At the present she is getting ready to spend the summer in Europe. But she will return to Washington next fall.

"Then, perhaps, I will attempt some real serious work," she says. Her enthusiasm is limitless when she talks about painting. Since she was a child, art has been a constant source of delight to her. She never studied art in schools, but has done serious work with artists of her own country.

Her master was Pablo Burchard of great reputation in Chile.

The Mascot

The President and Mrs. Hoover were entertaining the disabled soldiers of the World War with the annual garden fete on the lawn at the White House.

No one was getting a bigger kick out of the occasion than the pet raccoon perched atop a stump in the wire cage in the midst of the crowd. Nothing escaped his eyes.

Mr. Hoover, surrounded by his group of aides, was making the rounds, shaking hands with the men in the wheel chairs. He paused in front of the wire cage.

Turning to his party, the president remarked that he had been told the raccoon was something of a mongrel in the way of his line. "But we lent him to a boy's baseball team recently as a mascot," he said. "The team won the series championship. Perhaps he is pretty good after all."

Women of the Isle of Man, Great Britain, were not excited over the general elections. They have been voting alongside their men for 10 years, women householders having had the vote for 30 years.
